INTERVIEW WITH MARCO MAGRINI

Global Technical Service as Veterinary Specialist

How did you get into poultry business?

During my university studies in veterinary medicine I had the opportunity to carry out a scholarship at an Istituto Zooprofilattico Sperimentale (public laboratory) which is very close to the poultry industry where I took my first steps.

My first job in the poultry sector was actually in LOHMANN in the Italian subsidiary.

What expectations do you have of your new job? What attracts you to your new field of activity?

I expect, having the opportunity to see different realities around the world to deepen and learn about the different challenges and opportunities.

Furthermore, the possibility of working with expert colleagues on other fundamental aspects for the layer business will make me grow from professional and human point of view.

The chance to interact with experts in different fields is necessary to have an holistic approach for a better technical support to our customers.

What is your special field?

During my work experiences I had the opportunity to deepen the topic of vaccinations, an increasingly important and constantly evolving topic.

What do you see as the biggest challenge for your new job in the Global Technical Service Team?

The biggest challenge I'm going to face is certainly the diversity of approaches and possibilities I'll encounter around the world.

Fortunately I believe that the experience of my colleagues will allow me to find the best solutions in every situation.

And we have already asked many of our experts this question: Do you have a favorite LOHMANN chicken?

I started my work by following many LOHMANN BROWN CLASSIC, so I think this one is a bit special for me.
